Painting & Detailing: Giving Trains That Realistic Look

by Lewis Polk

These new graphics on our reefers are a fabulous collaboration of paint scheme artist Michael J. and our production facility, Sanda Kan.

Michael J. is perhaps the best in the world in translating the graphics from the real world down to a miniature size. Michael works in CorelDraw, and he was a beta tester of the software. His library is extensive and his personal train knowledge makes his replications dead on. Rarely have his sources been incorrect, even down to the road numbers used. The lettering and graphics are hand-drawn to get the type just right, taking many hours of work. That is true dedication and Team Aristo is lucky to have such a dedicated graphic artist on board.

Getting these graphics from design concept to production reality is very challenging. Sanda Kan does amazing paintwork that involves up to 100 people painting complicated paint schemes on each car. Products are painted in waterfall spray booths, using up to a dozen or so masks that have to be washed and dried between each application of color. Not only is the application of Michael J.'s work difficult to accomplish, but also the colors have to be matched precisely (with lead-free paint) to colors that have been assigned by Michael J. Those colors need to be replicated the same year in and year out.

To achieve the lettering and logos you see on Aristo-Craft locomotives and cars requires Tampo pad printing machines. These devices use metal dye plates to accurately place graphics on products. The patterns on the plates themselves are etched in from Michael J.'s artwork after he transfers it to film.

Any product can have up to 20 Tampo pad-printing machines involved all at once, and each machine takes three people to operate it effectively. The first person takes the undecorated product from a rolling supply cart and hands it to the operator. The operator then applies the pad print twice to the surface for a good impression. He then repeats the process on the opposite side. Lastly, the third person then takes the unit and puts in on another rolling cart, which is moved to the next machine in line for the next print area.

A specially built jig is needed for each print, as the item must be seated precisely so that both hits are done in the exact same position each time. One machine can only do one print and there are often up to 20 print areas on a G-gauge car.

In smaller scales, each color can be completed on one automated machine, but not so in G. The metal dye plates are a different color, thus the need for 20 or so separate machines. Equal pressure must be applied on the silicone printing pad across the full size of the pad. The pad is mounted on a single pole from the machine, restricting the number of prints that can be done at once. Basically, a three-inch or four-inch size is the maximum area that can be assured with ink coverage, even with double hits. In H.O. or N scales, that size can cover the entire car, but in G, where the size is usually 10-12 times the size of the smaller gauges, much more printing is required.

Each item can have dozens of metal printing plates and just filing them away to be found for a later run is a monstrous job. The making of the plates and the jigs is a key part of the cost of the product, which can add up to more than the costs of the original mold work and design when you have 20 or so different paint schemes.

It's quite a collaboration and it is what helps to make Aristo's products one of the leaders of the pack. This very complex process of painting and printing allows us to create really wonderful paint schemes like the new reefers in this issue.

2008 Large-Scale Train Show Update

by Harry Hartman

Harry Hartman is the Large Scale Show Manager for the East Coast Large Scale Train Show and Southeast Large Scale Train Show.

The Large Scale Trains Shows for Perry, Georgia and York, Pennsylvania are on track for the 2008 season!

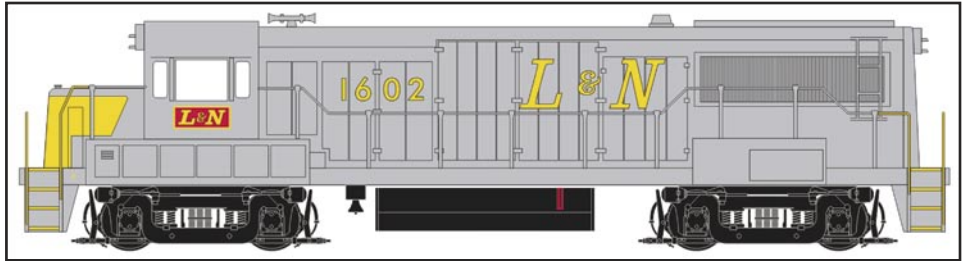

The show dates for the SELSTS in Perry are February 15th and 16th. The doors will be open from 9:00 A.M. till 6:00 P.M. both days. Dealers/vendors will be able to set up on Thursday, the 14th.

The ECLSTS will be March 28th and 29th. The doors will be open from 9:00 A.M. till 6:00 P.M. both days. Dealers/vendors will be able to set up on Thursday, the 27th.

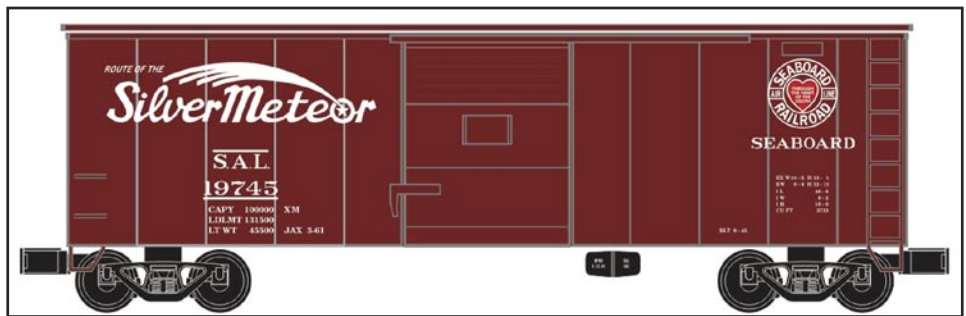

Some concern has been mentioned about not having enough show cars and engines, so we are ordering more than we did last year. This still does not guarantee that you will be able to purchase your show cars and engines if you wait till late Saturday to come to the shows. As I have said in the past, if you arrive too late or you just can not make it, you need to work out something with one of your friends that will be going so you can be sure of getting these limited edition items.

These show cars are becoming more popular as the years go by and an excellent value. I don't know where else you can find a limited production engine and car with such high-quality graphics for such a low price. I know I have gone with the intention of just buying one or two of the show cars, but when I get there and see it in person, I have to have all of the road numbers.

As I said at the beginning of this article, things are on track for several great shows in 2008. Most of the vendors have signed up to return to the shows. If you know of a vendor that would like to purchase some booth space to sell their products, they need to contact JJ Productions at jjproductions@atlanticbb.net or JJ Productions, P.O. Box 142, Ridgeley, WV 26753 for a registration form. Last year at the ECLSTS and the SELSTS, we had our first appearance of several new vendors. If you have not told them so, you should thank them for coming to the 2007 show and encourage them to return to the 2008 show.

I would like to issue a personal challenge to everyone reading this article: I challenge everyone to talk to five new people about Garden Railroading and invite them to see why you are excited about Garden Railroading. I also challenge you to bring two new people to the Large Scale Train Shows.

Last year at the ECLSTS we had a last-minute addition to the vendors area. We did not get much time to advertise the fact that we were going to have a shipping vendor present so you could have your goodies shipped home. The UPS Store in York came to the ECLSTS and was there Friday and Saturday. For the little announcing we were able to do, people took advantage of the UPS store to ship their purchases home. You will be pleased to know that they will be back at the 2008 ECLSTS. We are also working very hard to get a shipping company at the SELSTS, so much so that negotiations are under way as I write this article.

If you have seen the latest issue of the Garden Railway Magazine, you should have noticed in our ad for the 2008 JJ Production Shows that we are going back to the Mid-West. Yes, we are making arrangements to have a show in October of 2008. It will be in Springfield, Illinois. We are securing the building for October 3rd and 4th. It will be the same format as our other two shows. It will be a Friday/Saturday show, open the usual time to the public, and Thursday will be the vendor setup day. We are looking at several road names for the show engine and car. I am sure when the final decision will be made on this show's car and engine, they will be great choices.

That is about all I can tell you so far on this show. I encourage you to watch the Aristo-Craft web site for a forum to be established for the Mid-West Show. Watch the Aristo-Craft Trains INSIDER, and Garden Railways Magazine for additional information on this show and the other shows as each of them progress towards their opening days. Remember, your help and attendance makes each of these shows a success. The more we get the word out on these shows, the more excitement we will create for the hobby.

DECIDING WHAT TO MAKEHow Production Schedules are Determined

by Lewis Polk

Bringing a product to market is often a gamble. It's a competitive world out there, and as soon as I announce a project, others are announcing similar projects and rushing to get it to market before we do. When it takes several hundred thousands of dollars to produce an item, it's not so good when you have to split the sales with another maker.

The GP-40 Diesel Locomotive: Aristo-Craft's new engine for release Fall 2007

It's the return on investment that drives the decision on what we make. We do a spreadsheet with potential sales and costs analyzed by the potential return on costs. We watch the success of H.O. and O products in particular, which has a much larger base of customers for market testing, and see what is selling in those markets.

The Aristo-Craft Mallet, for example, was based on the huge success that Life-Like had with theirs in H.O. The fact that the Mallet was used by dozens of road names, as opposed to one road name (U.P.) for the Big Boy or one for the Hudson (NYC), made us choose it as our go-ahead steam engine at that time.

Perhaps we were wrong and the appeal of those items outweighs the more universal appeal of the Mallet, but that's what drove our decision, right or wrong. As I said, it's a business; my personal choices are minimized when we watch what has worked.

Difficulty comes when trying to pique customers' interest about future production while keeping in-development projects out of sight from competitors.

The customers' thirst for knowledge about what is next is hard to keep up with when products can sometimes take years to bring to market.

Take, for example, the cases of the GP-40 and SD-9, two products announced by Aristo-Craft a while ago, one (the GP-40) due to hit retail stores this fall, the other (the SD-9) delayed indefinitely. We felt that a shorter 2-axle loco, like a GP-40, would be more widely accepted in the market instead of another 3-axle loco, such as the SD-9. Thus, we developed a revolutionary new drive system that we can use for many future projects with our engineer, Mr. Song, the first being the new GP-40. As a result, the SD-9 was pushed back even further.

Unfortunately, for fans of the SD-9, this was a tough blow, but a necessary business decision for our company. We certainly do not like leaving eager customers hanging, but we run this business on a pay-as-you-go basis. We can make more products as needed, but there's a limit to consumers' and dealers' pocketbooks. Only so much should be made in a single year, so we need to pace ourselves and change our method of letting you know what we're doing.

We are going to stop announcing product until the molds are finished and we're in the last few months of development and artwork. As owner and president, this final decision rests with me and I change my bet as needed. We own the molds and we pay for them 100%, not some abstract entity in China. This is a personal decision based on full support of team Aristo's input and the computer's analysis of which products gave us the best return on investment. I don't gamble when I'm in Las Vegas, but if I did, I would be a card counter for sure. I'm making a business decision guesstimate, not a pure throw of the dice.

From now on, if you hear about it from us, the delivery is imminent. We do have a financial spreadsheet of new items for the next three years ahead, but again we leave flexibility in the schedule to compete effectively as the market changes. As competition for train-buying dollars gets more intense, it's that flexibility that will allow to keep bringing you great products for many years to come.

Dennis Cherry of the Gaylord Texan Resort & Convention Center in Grapevine, Texas sent us these photos of their custom-designed Western-themed Aristo-Craft Eggliners for their upcoming Christmas layout. The lights on the loco are being replaced with high-intensity LEDs, including one that changes into six different colors. Enjoy!

TRACK PRICE UPDATE

by Lewis Polk

Though we were told that all track prices had doubled, we thought this through and re-evaluated all of the switches and crossings that were more labor intensive than rail intensive. Sure enough, the content of rail was far less than the doubling of prices warranted, so we received a recalculation reflected in our latest price list.

Brass has already gone up by 5% since we set our last prices in June. We are hard-pressed to maintain these prices.

However, we will try to maintain the pricing for the balance of 2007, but will likely have to adjust in 2008 if the copper pricing maintains its skyrocketing advances.

We will make credit adjustments for the higher switch and crossing prices charged in the interim period. We will also continue our sales through February 28, 2008, which is in place to try to soften the sticker shock of the rapid price escalation.

The good news is that we should be able to have a steady supply of track in the near future and we will continue to expand the range with new switches and crossings.

Please note that our pricing is lower than track was priced in the 1970s when G-Gauge boomed into existence. We noted a new maker in Europe has posted a price of 15 Euros for a 60-cm size (2 feet), which works out to a foot price of $10.50 dollars, so the price increase is a world phenomenon and not just one related to China production.

We apologize for not having questioned the switch prices before the initial price announcement, but it was the customers that pointed this out to us. To them, we say thank you.

Replacing the Aristo-Craft Snowplow Headlight With A Super-Bright, Warm, White LED

Forward by Ron Wenger

This is another simple, well-thought-out how-to article written by Aristo-Craft Fan Club Member Ward Hutton of New Jersey. In it, he takes you through the step-by-step process of replacing the tiny incandescent light bulb on the Aristo-Craft Snow Plow with an LED. These instructions can also be used for other LED installations with just a little modification and could even be used to install a blinking LED on the back of a caboose.

This is Ward's second submission to the "Aristo-Craft Insider" and for his efforts he will receive a freight car of his choice.

If you have an article or an idea for an article, contact me at wrailsrt@ix.netcom.com with your idea and we will discuss it. If we can use it, we will send you your choice of a freight car from the in-stock list. The idea has to be submitted through me, and must be published. Have a good idea and don't think you write that well? Contact me anyway and we can help with the words. Photos of the process are a must. If you can tell me in your words how you did it and show me with photos, I'll take care of the rest.

Ward mentioned in a recent Aristo-Craft Forum thread how pleased he was with installing a very bright LED into his Aristo-Craft Snow Plow car. A couple of guys asked him how he did it and what parts he used, so Ward wrote this up.

Ward does not think his photos are good enough, but I think his photos pretty much express the results that he got from this project. Not all of us are Marty Cozad types with a camera, but these photos show the results.

Ward says that these LEDs are very bright, lighting a wall from 8 feet away. He used a full bridge rectifier, which accepts any polarity on its input leads and outputs constant polarity to the LED, despite the input polarity. This ensures the LED will be on regardless of the direction of the snowplow. Ward tested the LEDs with a 5v regulator for constant intensity lighting and without the regulator, which would simplify the installation. Unlike an incandescent bulb, the LED lit up at low voltage and the intensity did not change that much up to full voltage, so Ward decided the voltage regulator was not needed. (He runs track power with an Ultima supplying a TE set to PWC). Ward figured out how to work with LEDs by reading various large-scale forum threads on LED lighting and it turned out to be much easier than he expected.

Parts List:

Full Bridge Rectifier - 1 ½ amp, 400 PIV, All Electronics #FWB-15 (couple of dollars)

LED - T 1 ¾ 5mm 12,000 MCD, w/ forward voltage of 3.3/3.6V, forward current of 20-30mA, view angle 20, warm white LED from Ebay. (10 LEDs w/ resistors for $9.99)

Resistor - 750 ohm, ¼ watt, which came with the LEDs (a 820 or 1k ohm resistor could also be used). A ½- or 1-watt resistor would probably be better, but since this a “cold weather” car, I believe it will be fine. It did not get hot during testing.

Step 1: First I removed the headlight from the plow car, cutting the wires flush with the back of the headlight. From the back of the headlight, I drilled towards the lens using a drill bit slightly bigger than the “collar” section of the LED. When I reached the lens, I switched to a smaller bit, the size of the body of the LED. I used that bit to drill through the lens. I test-fit the LED and had a tight enough fit that I could just press it into place from the back of the headlight, so that it was flush with the front of the lens. I would have glued it if it were loose.

Before installing the LED, I turned over the snow plow and cut the wires that went to the headlight, leaving enough wire at the truck so I could solder wire extensions to these power supply wires.

Step 2: I then cut the leads of the LED short enough so that after I soldered the wires to it, added heat-shrink tubing and installed it, only the heat-shrink section showed from the back of the headlight. I trusted that nothing would bend the two short LED leads together and create a short, but a piece of tape between the two leads would have been a good idea. I made sure I soldered the black wire to the lead on the flat side of the LED collar and the red wire to what was the longer lead of the LED. I then remounted the headlight and fed the wire back into the hole towards the truck.

Step 3: The full bridge rectifier has four leads. One is marked as “+” and is the longest lead, the opposite lead is marked as “-” and is slightly shorter. These are the leads to power the LED. I cut the “+” lead short and soldered the 750 ohm resistor to this lead, using shrink tubing to insulate the lead and resistor.

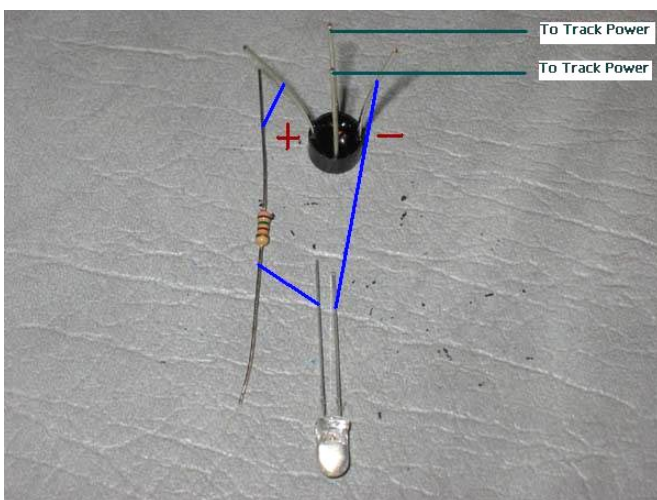

I cut the “-” lead to the same length as the “+” lead with resistor. Then I soldered the red wire from the LED to the resistor and the black wire from the LED to the “-” lead. I put heat-shrink tubing on this lead also.

Final Step: The remaining two leads of the bridge rectifier are not polarity sensitive. These two leads are soldered to the power wires coming from the truck. Space was tight so I used sticky tape to hold the bridge rectifier in place while soldering the wires to it and added extensions to the wires as needed. After track-testing the new LED headlight, I used Goop glue to secure the bridge rectifier to the inside of the plow.

Finished: I’m very pleased with the light output of the LED headlight. I can’t wait to try it on a moonless night with about 4" of snow to plow. My next project will be installing the LEDs in the searchlights of my searchlight car.

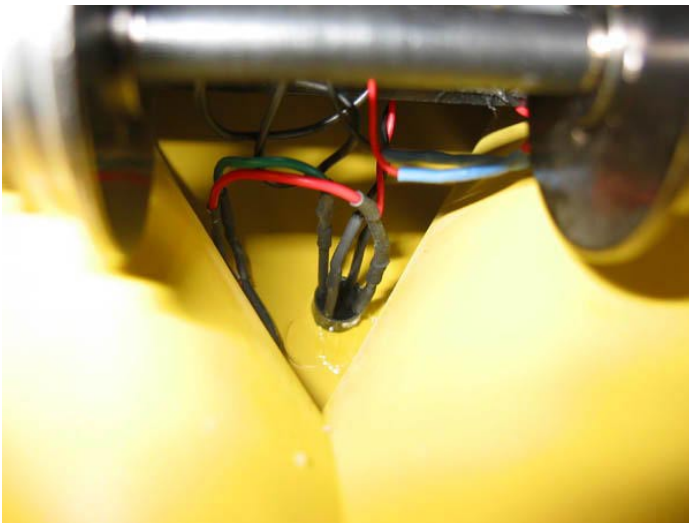

Questions may be directed to Ward on the Aristo Craft Forum.

Here are the three components I added to the snow plow car for LED lighting and how they are connected.

Here is a close-up of the bridge rectifier mounted under the plow section. Note – To lengthen the wires from the LED I added a green wire to the black wire. The red and green wires go to the LED.
