

Trains attract children, adults in Union Bridge

By Sharon Burleson Schuster Neighborhoods correspondent | Posted: Friday, May 18, 2012 12:00 am

Four-year-old Jackson Pellak, of West Friendship, said he came to see “big trains, little trains and moving trains” at the Western Maryland Railway Historical Society Museum Complex in Union Bridge on May 12, National Train Day. The museum didn’t disappoint as the train buff encountered a real engine, various scale-model train garden displays and a small operating train just large enough for a kid to ride.

Young and mature train enthusiasts alike delighted in the many historical displays, train gardens with little trains chugging over countryside and through miniature reconstructed local towns, and the spontaneous and enthusiastic commentary offered on the spot by members of the society.

01Wed Jun 20 2012 08:49:18 GMT-0700 (Pacific Daylight Time)